Over the past year, concerns have grown regarding the number of young Americans, Canadians and Europeans who have travelled to the Middle East to fight with the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL or ISIS). National security agencies on both continents are concerned about the increased potential for homegrown attacks when these ‘veterans’ return from the battlefield. In this public lecture, Dr. Curtis will discuss:

- the new ISIL connection and the radicalization process many of these “homegrown terrorists” have experienced
- his findings regarding the motivations and criminal pathways of these “homegrown terrorists”
- the steps that security and intelligence agencies are taking to counter this threat
