Born in Kailua, O'ahu and raised in Hilo and Puna, Hawai'i, Lokelani Brandt currently works as a Senior Archaeologist and Ethnographer at ASM Affiliates, an archaeological consulting firm in Hilo. Her early Hawaiian immersion education at Ke Kula Kaiapuni O Keaukaha and Nāwahītokalani'ōpu'u has made her a fluent speaker of the Hawaiian language. In 2017, she graduated with her master's degree from the Heritage Management Program at the University of Hawai'i at Hilo. Her thesis, which was oriented around building community, pulled together primary archival and secondary resources to help reveal the Hawaiian cultural history of Pi'opi'o, a traditional land division in coastal Waiākea. Although she works as a full-time archaeologist and ethnographer and is a mom of two, Lokelani has made it her life's work to continue sharing the Hawaiian cultural history of Pi'opi'o and Hilo. She currently lives in Waiākea with her 'ohana.

Organized by the Hawai'i CC UH Hilo Lā Honua Earth Day Committee, with support from the Office of the Chancellor at UH Hilo and Hawai'i CC, UH Office of Sustainability and VISTA Sustainability Initiative Programs at Hawai'i CC and UH Hilo, the Tropical Conservation Biology & Environmental Science (TCBES) Graduate Program at UH Hilo, Pacific Internships for Exploring Science (PIPES) at UH Hilo, Hawai'i Life Styles Program at Hawai'i CC, Kīpuka Native Hawaiian Student Center at UH Hilo, and the Sustainability Committees of UH Hilo and Hawai'i CC.
